Historical Pageant Plan Meets Approval

Representatives of Organizations Respond to Farm and Home Bureau Invitation to Join in Big Pageant Showing Historic Scenes in Which Every Community Will Be Expected to Participate.

Plans for a big historical pageant representative of the past century and a half in Ulster county, which had their inception recently with the Ulster County Farm and Home Bureau, received further impetus Friday night at a meeting held at the court house.

Like most celebrations, the initial pageant meeting bore the characteristics both a bean stalk and an oak, and while the meeting Friday night was not large, it was disclosed that enough of a start had been made to insure the pageant taking on rapid growth.

Assemblyman Millard Davis, president of the Farm Bureau, presided at the meeting which guaranteed an enthusiastic send off, especially with Mr. William A. Warren of the Home Bureau also present and actively interested.

Success Assured.

Mr. Davis explained briefly how the Ulster County Farm and Home Bureau felt that in such an historic community as Ulster county it was desirable that the sequelentennial of Revolutionary times be properly observed, and had made a start toward the idea of putting on next summer a big historical pageant that should be not only a credit to the Revolutionary ancestors, to people of today, but that shall make another page of history for future generations.

While Mr. Davis was sure, judging by past productions of similar character in the county and city, of the success of such an undertaking if all the citizens of the county participated, he thought that the very preparation for and cooperation in such a pageant would be of inestimable value to the entire community. Mr. Davis said that the Farm and Home Bureaus had been so mighty fortunate as to secure as the one who would put on such a great production, the man who made the New Palitz Pageant such a huge success. Professor Bruce Bennett of New Palitz, whom he then introduced.

Pageant Will Grow.

Mr. Bennett said: being minded of the immense success of the Farm and Home Bureau annual picnic, he was equally sure that a pageant of Ulster county that would be the biggest kind of an outdoor show could be presented by the people of the county with equal success. They have just put on a Christmas play at the New Palitz Normal School of most successful success, which they made themselves, which grew, and Prof. Bennett assured his hearers that the growth and development of such a pageant as the Farm and Home Bureaus had in mind would of itself be one of the most valuable features of the affair. For it would also mean the growing together of the people of the entire community of Ulster county outside of and within Kingston city.

Communities Present Scenes.

The general idea of the pageant would be to depict scenes from the early Colonial and Revolutionary history of the community, working up to the burning of Kingston in 1777, the great climax. It would probably take some fifteen hundred people to properly present such a pageant, but that was not said Mr. Bennett, so assuming that all when it was taken into consideration that there are some 22 Farm and Home Bureau units in the county, each of which would form the nucleus for one picture in the pageant which, presented somewhat in moving picture fashion, would offer a great historic though local pageant. This would also divide the actual work of preparation as to make it possible of excellent accomplishment, for each such unit would be responsible for its own properties, etc., as well as for its own particular picture, and each such community would have a representative in the various larger committees that would have charge of the pageant as a whole.

Suggestions Furnished.

After Prof. Bennett's explanation, Mr. Davis called for expressions from those present about the matter and all were enthusiastic in favor of such a pageant of community and historic interest. It was then suggested that a committee be organized to take up the matter, and Mr. Davis said that he would be glad to have the committee report to the next meeting of the Farm and Home Bureau.

Among the suggestions was one that Mr. Davis and his committee should go to the other County Pageant last year.

Extension of New Radiophone

Feasibility of Extension of Radiophone Service to Island Cities Demonstrated in a Number of Calls—Officials Pleased With Tests.

New York, Jan. 8 (AP).—The family telephone in every cross roads hamlet in the country today became a possible link with London after the successful inauguration of the Transatlantic radiophone service yesterday.

No greater technical difficulties would be involved in extending the service to other cities, officials of the American Telephone and Telegraph Company, said, than would be met in ordinary long distance connections. Further extension, they said, depended merely upon the public demand.

More than 40 conversations marked the opening of the New York-London service at an estimated cost to the subscribers of $12,000.

The possibility of extension of the service to island cities was demonstrated in a call between the New York World and its London representative during which the St. Louis Post Dispatch listened through an ordinary long distance connection.

Another call received here by Major Edward Bowes, managing director of the Capitol Theatre, was relayed by him over land wires to John Gilbert to a motion picture studio in Culver City, Cal., 7,000 miles away.

Inauguration of the service met expectations of telephone company officials in every way, they said, despite the worst static conditions in a month.

At intervals, service had to be suspended due to the air disturbances, but the delays were only temporary and all conversations were completed.

HORNBY TALKS TO MCGRAW ABOUT SALARY

New York, Jan. 8 (AP).—Rogers Hornsby, traded by the St. Louis world champions because he could not agree with the management on salary questions, is here to see if he and his new employers, the New York Giants, can reach an agreement on the same subject.

The former manager of the Cardinals, who is expected to play second base for New York in the 1927 season, conferred last night with manager John McGraw and it is believed will sign a contract today.

Hornsby's contract with St. Louis called for $30,000 annually but it was predicted that the figures would be revised upward in New York.

Panama Residents Are Aroused Over American Treaty

Popular Sentiment Against the Panaman-American Treaty Growing in Panama—Committee Requested to Delay Report.

Panama, Jan. 8 (AP).—Popular sentiment against the Panaman-American treaty is growing here, and the Government is doing its utmost to prevent the inflaming of the populace. Proposed mass meetings have been forbidden, and the congressional committee engaged in studying the treaty has been requested to delay its report.

Dr. Harmonio Arias, former Panaman delegate to the League of Nations, leader of the fight against the treaty, speaking before the Rotary Club here yesterday, said:

"It is impossible for anyone to predict whether the Congress of Panama will ratify the treaty recently negotiated between Panama and the United States, but it is quite evident that in all sections of the country every man, woman and child feels that an injustice will be committed against Panama in the event of its approval."

The New Panaman-American treaty gives the armed forces of the United States free transit through Panama in time of peace, and provides that Panama shall declare herself in a state of war "in case of any war in which the United States should be a belligerent." Panama agrees to cooperate in all possible ways in the defense of Panama Canal.

Other articles give the United States complete control over all radio and cable communications and supervision over all aircraft and aviation centers. Part of Manzanilla Island, at the Atlantic terminus of the canal, and the harbor of Colon are turned over to the United States for perpetual occupation.

Fire Destroys Shadow Lawn

West Long Branch, N. J., Jan. 8 (AP).—A huge heap of smoldering timber remained today of Shadow Lawn, show place of New Jersey and summer White House during the administration of President Wilson.

Fire last night, supposedly caused by a short circuit in the lighting system, in addition to razing the beautiful mansion, scared shrubbery and trees over much of the twenty surrounding acres.

The house was owned by Hubert T. Parsons, president of F. W. Woolworth Company. The loss was estimated at $1,000,000. Precious treasures of art collected by Mr. Parsons in his travels, including tapestries, rare rugs and period furniture, were destroyed.

Baseball Hearing Suddenly Closed

Commissioner Landis Announces He Will Dispose of Case Next Wednesday—Gandil Also Accuses Players of Throwing Games.

Chicago, Jan. 8 (AP).—Arnold (Chick) Gandil, sun bronzed baseball outlaw from the wide open spaces, has exploded in the ranks of organized baseball the ammunition he has kept dry for ten years.

Standing shoulder to shoulder with his pal of baseball days, Swede Risberg, he fired his charges of diamond dishonesty yesterday across the battleground from which Kenesaw Mountain Landis guides the destinies of the big leagues.

Eyes blazing, and with mien aggressively defiant, Gandil sent his shots straight at some two dozen baseball players, or former players.

The men Gandil accused of contributing or accepting money for the throwing of four American League games Chicago took from Detroit September 2 and 3, 1917—such names as Eddie Collins, Ray Schalk, Clarence Rowland, Red Faber and George Dula—gave Gandil the same return volley of emphatic denial that they had poured upon Risberg two days before.

Sitting as referee was the white haired commissioner, $65,000 a year custodian of baseball's integrity. The man who today contemplates the testimony of more than 40 witnesses, Landis snapped the hearing to a sudden close last night with this pronouncement:

"I'll dispose of this matter Wednesday morning at 10 o'clock."

FIRE RAZES COTTAGES AT NANTASKIE BEACH

Hull, Mass., Jan. 8 (AP).—A fire at Nantasket Beach which levelled the 174 room Atlantic House, a summer resort, in less than an hour, destroyed two large cottages and damaged five others with an estimated loss of $250,000 was brought under control early today through the combined efforts of firemen from nine surrounding towns aiding the local department.

The flames were fought in the face of a 45-mile onshore gale and a thermometer of 14 degrees. Spray from the score of hose lines froze on the ladders, making precarious footing for the firemen, four of whom were injured in falls.

Boston—Latest modes in cotton fabrics are to be displayed by a traveling style show. Presumably silk stockings will be worn.

New York—John McCormack thinks that Geraldine Farrar will be America's greatest singer. Departing for Europe today he said: "I had Geraldine Farrar at my home for dinner last evening, and she sang. I never was so thrilled. I was more thrilled than when I first heard her. She still is America's greatest singer."

Principles of 50 Years Ago Uphold Nicaragua Policy

"Evarts Doctrine" Is Quoted to Back Up Our Attitude Towards Nicaragua—European and Latin American Press Attack American Action.

Washington, Jan. 8 (AP).—Opponents of the American government's policy in Nicaragua, now augmented by certain European as well as Latin American newspapers have been answered anew by the Coolidge administration, and principles enunciated fifty years ago have been recalled to back up its attitude.

These principles, brought to light from the aging files of the state department yesterday and announced from the White House as one set of several precedents for the government's present day action, were contained in the so-called "Evarts doctrine," a note communicated by William Maxwell Evarts, secretary of state under President Hayes, to Minister Foster for presentation to the Mexican government in 1878.

"The first duty of government," the note said, "is to protect life and property." "This is a paramount obligation. For this governments are instituted, and governments neglecting or failing to perform it become worse than useless."

"This duty the government of the United States has determined to perform to the extent of its power toward its citizens on the border. It is not solicitude, it never has been, about the methods or ways in which that protection shall be accomplished, whether by formal treaty stipulations or by formal conventions, whether by the action of judicial tribunals or that of military force."

"Protection in fact to American lives and property is the sole point upon which the United States are insistent."

This policy, together with that laid down by Secretary Hughes, which led to the Central American Treaty designed to terminate recurring revolutionary tendencies in those countries, were pointed to as having direct bearing on the Administration's Nicaraguan stand.

Attention was called to them after Chairman Borah of the Senate Foreign Relations Committee, had taken a definite position against such a policy as unwarranted "intervention."

European Press Aroused.

Meanwhile, French English and Costa Rica newspapers have joined the latest editorial upheaval against this country's action in sending warships and landing marines in Nicaragua, where the American recognized Conservative government of President Diaz is being opposed in warfare by Juan B. Sacasa, Liberal, with Mexican recognition.

French newspapers of all types charge the United States with "imperialism," while the London Spectator says the "whole of Central and South America will be further excited against the Monroe doctrine."

As to the actual developments in Nicaragua itself, officials here have little news, but Managua reports, besides telling of preparations for further engagements, say that Liberal adherents have asked Sacasa to appoint a representative to treat with Diaz and that Rear Admiral Laitner, in command of American naval forces, has announced his willingness to use his good offices toward this end.

Sacasa, in a statement to The Associated Press at Puerto Cabezas, where he has set up his own government, declares he is striving to maintain the Nicaraguan "constitution" "without animosity against the American government or interests in Nicaragua."

BURROS AND LLAMAS REPLACED BY TRUCKS

Popular Type of Truck Loaded With Concrete Blocks

Transportation of heavy supplies up steep mountain trails formerly traversed only by burros and llamas, to Bolivian mines located 12,000 to 16,000 feet above sea level in Andes range, has been solved by the use of light automobile trucks.

Developed by Incas. Centuries ago the Incas first developed these mines located in the most inaccessible inland ranges. The Spanish conquistadores, envious of the Indians' wealth, made short work of reducing the native population to a condition of slavery and supervising the production of gold. In later years silver and tin have been the most profitable metals produced in Bolivia, with operations seriously handicapped by the inaccessibility of the mining sites.

Until a year ago burros and llamas, carrying a maximum load of 200 pounds each and traveling only 20 miles daily were relied upon to transport supplies to the sky-line operating centers and to carry down to sea-level and railroads the refined metals, enormously heavy even in small quantities. Improvements in mining practice were impossible until better distributing methods were available.

Charges Reduced

Now standing roads which were only rough trails covered with rocks and the fact that an automobile motor ordinarily loses 30 to 35 per cent of its power when operating in the rarefied atmosphere of high altitudes, trucks have practically superseded the pack animals. One light truck carrying 2,000 pounds and covering 120 miles daily, does the work of 120 burros or llamas and cuts transportation charges exactly in half.

ALCOHOL IS BEST ANTI-FREEZE DOPE

Great Drawback Is That It Readily Evaporates and Must Be Replaced.

Letter circular No. 23 in revised form has just been issued by the United States bureau of standards. It embodies the tests made on a number of anti-freezing mixtures and gives a table showing the percentages of alcohol, of glycerin, and of combinations of the two that are necessary to produce a solution having a given freezing point.

Alcohol is still regarded as the best material to keep automobile radiators from freezing. If wood alcohol is used care should be taken to see that it is free from acid, otherwise corrosion of the radiator and circulatory system may result. The great drawback to the use of alcohol is the fact that it readily evaporates and has to be replaced. Glycerin does not have this drawback, but it is more expensive.

Anti-Freeze Solutions.

Among other anti-freeze solutions discussed are calcium chloride, honey, glucose and kerosene.

Calcium chloride is frequently used and found to be very effective, but it has a decided corrosive action, particularly on solder and aluminum. This salt forms the basis of many of the patent anti-freeze mixtures on the market. To some of these a soluble chromate is added to prevent corrosion. The bureau finds that little corrosion results when this is added except to the aluminum parts. Another troublesome feature of calcium chloride is its tendency to cause short circuits when it gets on the spark plugs or ignition wires. When cold it takes up moisture and forms a good conducting layer where such is not desired. It is hard to remove and the short circuits formed by it hard to find because they disappear when the engine gets hot.

Unsatisfactory Mixtures.

Honey and glucose were found unsatisfactory because a high concentration is necessary to prevent freezing, and this results in a thick solution that does not flow freely. There is also danger of depositing sugar in the circulatory system. Low percentage solutions do not lower the freezing point to any great extent, but they do prevent bursting the radiator. When such a solution does freeze it first turns to a slush which must first be cooled to a considerably greater extent before it turns solid.

Carburetor Wisdom

In making carburetor adjustments, an operator the owner usually performs when the engine is cold, the new adjustment should be given a chance to prove itself before another change is made. That is, after making a change the engine should be run for a couple of miles, even if it is still cold. It may be that after it has warmed up to normal running temperature, the new adjustment will prove satisfactory.

Deceleration Is Quite Important to Motorist

"Accelerates from five to thirty miles an hour in ten seconds," reads an auto advertisement. Very good, but what about deceleration? How many seconds are required to bring the car from thirty miles an hour down to five?

It is customary to think of stopping in terms of distance, whereas it may be more to the point to consider it in seconds. The time interval has much to do with the distance, for even if a car has poor brakes and does not stop efficiently, a second saved somewhere in the process is quite a bit of distance saved as well.

By conserving even a fraction of a second, some drivers are able to get four-wheel-brake results with two-wheel brakes. Drivers who have used hand brakes in the past will remember the gain in deceleration distance when foot brakes speeded up the stopping process.

Stopping is coming to be a matter of seconds more than of distance. Stop watches on the braking technique of many drivers probably would show the need for such a change.

Cause of Some Leaks

Many cars have wires or rods leading from the front of the radiator to the parking brake on the carburetor. These rods pass through one of the six passages of the radiator. The tubes of radiators are made of very thin material, and in the course of a season's use the primer rod, in rattling around, through vibration of the car, may cause a leak that will be troublesome. The remedy is to insert a stiff piece of tubing in the air passage that holds the rod.

KINGSTON, N. Y., JAN. 5, 1927.

No nation in the world uses so profusely of the products of its metal mines and oil wells as does the United States, because no people enjoy to as great an extent as do our people the necessities and luxuries which these industries provide. That is why we should all be interested in a constructive and encouraging governmental policy toward these industries.

It is asserted, no doubt with good reason, that the United States entered upon the New Year "universally recognized" as the most powerful nation on earth, even the foreign nations most envious and unfriendly admitting the fact that "we have the greatest wealth, the greatest potential military strength, the largest number of men and women employed at the highest wages, the fullest command of the necessities and luxuries of life." The only question somewhat more in doubt is whether we have the sense of responsibility that should accompany such giant's strength and whether we shall employ our vast power selfishly only, or to a becoming extent under the influence of the admirable and generous principle long ago expressed in the term, "noblesse oblige."

TRANSATLANTIC TELEPHONY.

Many regarded Marconi as a dreamer when in 1897 he predicted a time when a telegram could be sent through the air a distance of twenty miles. And now a telephone receiver can be lifted from a desk in New York, a listed number in London obtained, followed by conversation all the way across the Atlantic ocean. Who has accomplished this latest of many wonders? No single man is mentioned to whom tribute may be paid. "His invention," we read, "is anonymous—necessarily so, because it represents the culmination of twenty years of research conducted by physicists and engineers. No longer are new technical achievements the result of casual and haphazard experimenting. Organized research solves the problems of industry so systematically, so rapidly, that generations need not elapse before improvements are made. Thus are to be explained the extraordinary strides which have been made in illumination, transportation and communication."

With the personal element thus eliminated, much of the romance of great invention is gone. This is partly why no such excitement is caused by the beginning of trans-Atlantic telephony as greeted the inauguration of the telegraph, the ordinary telephone and the cable. Another reason is that there have been so many marvelous achievements that we have begun to accept them as a matter of course. Moreover, the use of the trans-Atlantic telephone will be limited because relatively few have need for it, because of its cost, and because of the still existing difficulty of maintaining secrecy.

"HOODED MEN" IN GEORGIA.

Governor Walker of Georgia has announced that "mobs with heads covered with flour sacks shall not rule" in that state and has offered a reward of $1,000 for conviction of any member of such a mob. Governor Walker's campaign against the "hooded men" who terrorize small communities is backed by his declaration that martial law will be declared "if the regular processes of the courts fail to curb these outrages." One of the recent outrages was the secret shooting of Attorney Brown who had prosecuted five men indicted for fatally wounding William Wilson last July, although they were acquitted. Attorney Brown says the men who begged him were Ku Klux Klan regalia and told him they would teach him not "to prosecute the Klan."

But the head of the Klan in Georgia claims that the "hooded men" committing such outrages are not members of his order, pointing out that the Klan robes are "white with an emblem on the breast but no letters," whereas the hooded men who he says were white robes bearing the letters "K. K. K." Although these statements may not have been Klan members, it is obvious that the Klan's secrecy and disguise gives criminals and even murderers opportunity to cloak their evil deeds. That is why reputable men left the original Ku Klux Klan of reconstruction times as soon as it had served its purpose of frightening the ex-slaves and carpetbaggers in control of the country, thus protecting the homes of the native whites. Criminals began to masquerade as Klansmen then, and it would appear that there is similar masquerade now by men seeking private revenge or other evil ends. The question is, will the better element of the new Klan follow the example of the old time Confederates who disbanded their order when it had achieved its purpose and was beginning to be abused by knavish pretenders.

A POINT ABOUT THE EYES.

An eye specialist makes the statement that seventy-five per cent of the patients who consult a doctor have no organic trouble. This means that one case in every four will present symptoms of organic trouble that the physician will at once recognize, because he has read much about cases and has seen many of them. There is a high temperature, quickened pulse, pain at or near the seat of trouble, and so forth, and by means of the stethoscope, the microscope and a physical examination, the trouble is located and proper treatment given. However, most patients are not ill enough to be in bed, have no fever or rise in temperature, but usually have pain somewhere in the body.

Where the pain or ailment is about the eyes, he states that fully 80 per cent are not due to faulty vision, but to other causes, and he sends these cases to the general practitioner to have a thorough examination.

And so the point I wish to make is that instead of this being an age of specialists, it is really an age when the general practitioner is coming into his own.

Many cases that were formerly sent to specialists as soon as the patient complained of eye trouble, are now investigated fully by the general practitioner, because so many were sent back to him with the report that the eyes were all right, but that he would have to look elsewhere for the cause.

And so the trouble was located in the teeth, tonsils, gall bladder, and very often in the intestine itself, because of the sluggish muscular movement there.

This, of course, only goes to show how very intimately each part of the body is related to other parts, and that a pain in any particular place does not necessarily mean that the trouble has started there.

So just keep on seeing your family doctor when you are in pain or have any ailment, and only consult the specialist on his advice, or if you have not secured relief after a fair trial.

In fact it would be a good investment to see your family doctor once a year for an overhauling anyway.

TODAY'S STORY IN NEW YORK HISTORY

By Frederic A. Godcharles

(Copyright, 1927, by the Author)

Peter Cooper Builds the First American Locomotive for Real Use, January 8, 1831.

In view of the many millions of wealth represented by the locomotive-building industry in this country, from the standpoint of the unprecedented annual output, and the standard of excellence of its products, it would seem almost incredible that less than a century has elapsed since the first American locomotive for actual use was built. For today, January 8, 1831, marks the eventful date on which it was an accomplished fact.

During the preceding year Peter Cooper, the great New York philanthropist, who was then laying the foundation of his immense fortune in Baltimore, had constructed a diminutive engine, aptly christened "Tom Thumb," for the purpose of proving the practicable use of locomotives on a railroad, especially one with many short curves.

The trial trip of the "Tom Thumb" was on the track of the Baltimore and Ohio, then the most important railroad in the country. The little locomotive had an upright multitubular boiler no larger than an ordinary kitchen range, three and one-half inches in diameter, which transmitted power to the driving axle through a gear wheel. The tubes were improvised from gun barrels.

The engine performed the work for which it was built and for a time its form exercised considerable influence on the designing of American locomotives.

A speed of eighteen miles per hour was attained, hauling forty passengers beside the driver, who was none other than the builder, Peter Cooper, himself.

Cooper believed that the use of steam was essential to make railroad operating a success, and he built his experimental locomotive to prove the faith that was in him. His engine, "Tom Thumb," was little more than a model but it developed one and a half horse power and proved that a steam locomotive could be used in operating around very short curves.

Shortly after the experiments were made with Peter Cooper's model, the Baltimore and Ohio Railroad Company advertised, offering a premium of $500 for a locomotive built in the United States which would meet certain specified conditions. The prize was won by Phineas Davis, of York, Pa. Davis's engine had upright boiler and cylinders after Cooper's idea, and was the first in America of a class of engines called "grasshoppers" that were a familiar feature on the Baltimore and Ohio Railroad for many years.

Little wonder that within a few months after the successful experiments with "Tom Thumb" that locomotive should be followed by the construction at the West Point Foundry, West Point, N. Y., of a successor to the tiny model, built for actual use and ready for the road.

This real pioneer in American-made locomotives was named "Best Friend," and Peter Cooper completed it in every detail January 8, 1831.

This practical locomotive had a vertical tubular boiler, carried at one end of a horizontal frame, while the cylinders were carried at the other end, and the two pairs of wheels, coupled together by side rods, occupied the space between the boiler and cylinders. The latter were inclined, eight inches in diameter, sixteen inches stroke, and coupled direct to the rear axle.

The career of "Best Friend" was unfortunately of short duration, as within six months of its construction the boiler exploded.

But Cooper built another before the end of 1831, which he called the "DeWitt Clinton," and which was even more of a success than its predecessor. It was put to work on the Mohawk and Hudson, later called the Albany and Schenectady, the first railroad in New York, and now a part of the great New York Central System.

About the time Peter Cooper built these early locomotives he became extensively interested in iron manufacture and removed his iron business from Baltimore and New York to Trenton, N. J. In 1845 he built three blast furnaces at Phillipsburg, N. J., which were the largest in the world.

Mr. Cooper was the first to roll wrought iron beams for fire-proof structures. He was deeply interested in the canal system of his native state, and at a later date, in telegraphic communications, being president of several telegraph companies. He took an active share in the enterprise which resulted in laying the first Atlantic cable.

In 1876 he was nominated for the Presidency of the United States by the Independent Party, receiving nearly 100,000 votes. In 1854 he established in New York the well-known Cooper Union. He died in New York City April 4, 1883.

MOTOR FUEL TAX
FIGURES UP BIG

The bureau of public roads of the Department of Agriculture has made public a summary of the gasoline taxes by states for the first half of the calendar year 1926, showing the total taxes collected on motor vehicle fuel, refunds on gross tax, disposition of fund, rates and gallons of gasoline consumed by motor vehicles taxed throughout the United States.

It shows that such tax earnings aggregated $84,598,573, and that the total tax earnings of all the states were disposed of by $148,508 used as costs of collection, $64,961,677 used for state highways, $18,888,978 for local roads, $6,229,413 used for payments of state and county road bonds and $4,140,068 for miscellaneous purposes.

The average tax rate for the period, for all the states, was 2.39 cents a gallon, on June 30. The net gallons of gasoline taxed and used by motor vehicles in all the states aggregated 3,500,957,598, and the estimated additional gallons, not taxed and not used by motor vehicles, (reported only by Illinois, Massachusetts, New Jersey and New York), aggregated 856,450,000.

The total tax earnings on fuel for motor vehicles—the $84,598,573 mentioned—represent the actual taxes available for disposal. The gross tax assessed prior to deduction or refunds and the exemption refunds, deducted from the gross tax, are not totaled for the country as a whole. The statement says, because, while showing the procedure for obtaining the total tax, it is "of minor importance." Collection costs in many states, it was said, are paid from other state funds.

Play Signs and Shacks
in Report on Conditions

As a result of a survey made by hundreds of its affiliated clubs, the American Automobile association has issued an urgent appeal calling on state officials everywhere to take immediate steps to sweep aside the debris that mars the beauty of the landscape and in many instances adds to accident hazard along the nation's great motor highways.

The national motoring body made two specific points in its appeal, which is mainly addressed to state highway officials in charge of road maintenance, construction, and supervision, as follows:

First, there is so much advertising material along the highways that the motorist is constantly confused as between these variegated signs and the signs set up by the states for his safety and convenience in travel.

Second, in many instances the scenic beauty which is the great appeal in the call of the roads, is marred because of the continuance along many of the main highways of unsightly tumble down shacks of all kinds that constitute an eyesore to the motoring public.

Mexico Creates System of Federal Good Roads

The congress of Mexico created a system of federal roads by an act passed in March, 1925. A tax of three centavos per liter (about 5.7 cents per gallon) was placed on all gasoline, whether for domestic use or export. All the tax on tobacco was also diverted to the federal road fund. In case these two taxes do not amount to $500,000 per month, the treasury department is authorized to issue notes to make up the difference. At present the two taxes bring about $400,000 a month. The construction program consists of a total mileage of 1,337, principally in a north and south road from Laredo through Mexico City to Acapulco. There are at present 25,000 automobiles in the republic, most of them in Mexico City, and before federal road building began they could seldom go outside the city.

Victory Highway to Run
Through Mountain Tube

The Moffat tunnel commission which has in charge the construction of the mammoth tube which is being thrust through a mountain range in Colorado, has let the contract for two miles of railroad roadbed which will connect the Moffat railroad with the west portal of the tunnel. The new road will leave the present main line of the Moffat road near a crossing of the Victory highway and will reach the tunnel by an easy grade. The roadbed is to cross the Fraser river and the Victory highway on a bridge.

When the tunnel is complete, it will be available not only for railroad trains but also for automobiles, and will eliminate the surmounting of two high passes from the problem of crossing the continental divide.

Wide Highways Protect

Because of the ever-increasing number of automobiles in the United States, and partly because of traffic congestion in the 1924 convention of road builders at Chicago, wider highways are being adopted throughout the nation as a means of safeguarding the lives of motorists and relieving traffic congestion. R. T. Drury, newly elected vice president of the American Road Builders' association, stated. This will place close motorcycle riding about on foot.

JOHN CLIFFORD looked up from his office desk and added to a tall, straight, like youth in a neat library.

"You wanted to see me?" asked Clifford.

"Yes, sir. You advertised for a chauffeur."

"I want some one who is trustworthy to drive my mother about the country—no speed, understand? She is something of an invalid."

"Mr. Drury told me that, sir. He called my attention to the advertisement."

"Fast Drury? You come on his recommendation?"

The youth whiffed out a letter from his coat pocket and handed it across the desk. "From Mr. Drury, sir."

Clifford read the letter thoughtfully, while the chauffeur watched the hour dash here with the crown of staying hair.

"Well, young man, I am going to take you on Mr. Drury's strong recommendation—he says he has known your people. So your name is Jay— isn't it?"

"Jay Drury, sir. He is a very nice fellow, and he is a very nice fellow."

hood garage and you may come around with me and then you can drive me down to Woodland and I will show you about."

"The pay will be two hundred a month—I am paying for my mother's safety, Pat."

Mrs. Clifford felt in love with the ways of her new chauffeur at once. "He is so thoughtful, and tender, and yet keeps his place, John."

"I am glad you feel safe with him, mother. He seems a dependable youth."

"Why, the other day we overtook a car carrying a child who had been in a motor accident. They were looking frantically for a doctor. In an instant Pat pulled the emergency kit from under his seat and went over and dressed the wound as skillfully as a nurse or doctor. The woman telephoned to me afterward and said his quick action had saved the child's life. I was proud of Pat, Clifford."

"The new ambulance service in France, Drury tells me, Pat has been a brother dying from war wounds—and the kid's worried about him—all his money goes for that."

Pat's joy occupied the room over the smaller garage, which was close to the garage, and kept very much to himself, although the large wall of service at Woodland liked and respected him. One night the telephone bell in Pat's room rang sharply and, five minutes later, he appeared white-faced and desperate at Clifford's study door.

"Excuse me, Mr. Clifford, but my brother is dying and they've sent for me—the last train's gone—can I have your small car to get into town."

sir." The head was lifted high, but the dark eyes were full of unshed tears.

"I will drive you down myself, Pat," said Clifford quickly.

"Thank you, sir."

They reached the hospital in time for Pat's joy to talk with his dying brother, but one or two incidents caused his employer to think deeply as he returned home through the dark night. As Pat's hand leaped from the car, with broken thanks to Clifford, a doctor had come forward hurriedly.

"You are in time, Miss Patricia—be will last the night through."

And Pat's, crying like a girl, had said in a girl's broken voice: "Oh I shall be so alone now—I cannot let him go."

John Clifford did not go to bed at all that night. His thoughts were too busy. The next day he had a long conference with his friend, Paul Drury.

"There were just these two," said the latter gravely. "She was untrained for work that would bring in much money, but she could drive a car with the best of them—and she had to have money to make Roddy's last days easier. They two are the last of a fine old family, out of all all three I allowed Patricia to go to you because the work here to be with your mother—and I know you, I'll have to find something for her now in a different line."

"She can come as mother's companion—and run drive her just the same."

"I will try her on that. She is a sensible little thing and I'd like the Clifford."

Drury and Clifford attended the lonely funeral services and the military burial. Clifford envied his friend, who had a right to accompany Patricia through the whole thing, but at last poor Roddy was laid to rest in his soldier's grave, heaped with flowers sent down from Woodland and then there came the interview about Patricia's return to Mrs. Clifford. At last it was arranged and, under her name of Patricia Jay Clifford, the girl went back to Woodland.

A year later Paul Drury confided to John Clifford, who was looking young and happy that he had for years, "I tell you, John, if I were not a married man I'd certainly fall for Pat."

Clifford laughed sympathetically. "Well, I'm free as air—and I've asked her and she has said 'Yes'."

Time to Call Halt

The winter and the small run were in the grocery store one day. While waiting, the clerk being busy with other customers, the winter picked up a nut and ate it. The small one watched his father closely, then being careful as that no one might hear, he whispered: "Daddy, steal one for me!"—Indianapolis News.

Milk Preparations

There is a difference of sugar content and method of preparation between condensed and evaporated milk. Condensed milk is preserved by adding sugar before evaporating. Evaporated milk is made by evaporating part of the water and preserving by heat after the product is in the final container.

LAST NIGHT
on THE RADIO

Stall of the crunching variety invaded Blooperland Friday night and stimulated Little Willie to renewed efforts with the new radio set that Santa Claus brought him. For the first week he had the set, Little Willie played it according to the rules and, consequently, did not make much of a pest of himself. But after a week of this, it became too tame and Little Willie had qualified—in his own mind—as an expert, able to improve on the instructions given by the firm that made the set. So he turned on everything he had in the way of power and began twisting the dials. The worse natural conditions were the harder Little Willie tried to overcome them by causing his set to make funny loud noises that set him nothing but that filled the air with blooping.

WGY, WJZ and WEAU worked perfectly last night and furnished programs that should have satisfied anyone.

The chronic DX hounds found WMC, WSM, KDKA, WOC, WCN, WBBM and WCBM about the only stations that could penetrate the static and these sounded as though broadcasting in a busy railroad yard with many locomotives switching cars.

Origin of Candy

Over 200 years ago an English doctor was moved to pity for a little girl who had to take many medicines, so he made a mixture of sugar, water and flavoring extract. This he gave to the little girl with her medicine and she liked it so well that the doctor was persuaded after her recovery to prepare more of the delightful concoction with the medicine omitted. He called the preparation "candy." And that's how the popular confection originated.—Thrill Magazine.

Electric Hares Adorated. The proposed mechanical hare as a quarry for greyhound coursing has aroused considerable controversy in England. Two years ago Lady Astor supported a bill to abolish the use of the live hare. She contends that coursing a live hare with greyhounds is cruel, and in this belief is backed up by George Bernard Shaw, Galsworthy and other British humanitarians. The new electrical device has many enthusiasts; but the committee of the Greyhound Racing association asserts that coursing an artificially controlled hare is "not a sport."

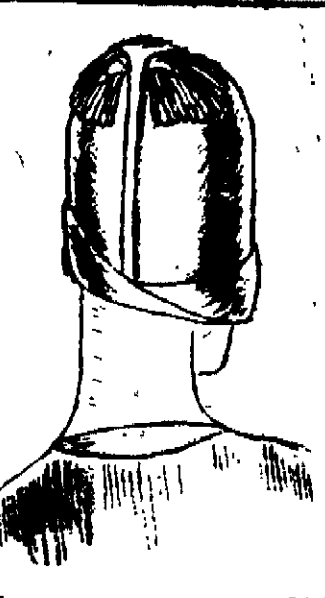

Advocates of the device here maintain that it provides better sport, since its speed can be regulated, thus ensuring a dependable test for the speed and endurance of the "leg dogs."

British Fashion Belain. As we glanced over the current number of the London Graphic a familiar picture caught our eye—that of the open parking space on our own St. James' square. "There is one of the most famous that Britain may still have from the U. S. A." runs the headline; and then this: "It was taken from the foot of the new palace headquarters which, by English tradition or standing design, occupies the old park."—Source Transmitt.

Your Hat, as Well as Your Dress, May Be Tucked or Tied Effectively.

Paris.—Among the several interesting treatments of felts must be mentioned the pinch tuck. Charming hats that are tucked down their crown and over their brim to within an inch or even less of the edge are among the ideas to be gleaned from looking over new models intended for immediate wear and for later, for that matter, since the idea is so new. Tiny tucks, as well as pleats of varying sizes, for some time have been one of the most important dress decorations. It usually follows that what dressmakers find to their liking, milliners copy. Almost everything under the sun excepting tucking having been previously done to the felt hat, it rather naturally follows that eventually felts should be tucked. When even

The High Crown on This Evening and Green Felt Hat is Made Interesting by a Tubular Tuck Taken in the Crown from Front to Back, and Pleated Binding Ribbon Laid on the Crown Tip on Each Side of the Tuck.

The tiniest tucks are released, a delightful little duffed or rippled effect is the result, and hats that have vertical tucks from side to side are considered to need no other garniture.

The spiked pin, always to be found in pairs, is another of the successes of the year. These pins are usually in bone or shell, but are occasionally to be found in crystal or metal. Berets are being worn and shown. Many hats follow closely the contour of the head across the front, the drapery occurring well toward the back. There is nothing new about the felt hat, which is knotted or which forms a bow of itself, but there are clever ways of varying this idea, ways which are naturally approved in a season when collars and belts are also to be tied.

ELEANOR GUNN On Fashions

The Wool Dress Scores in Paris, and the Novelties Include Some Fabrics So Soft as Silk and So Thick as Down.

Left—A Topcoat of Beige Kashimire Is Diversified by Elliptical Rows of Tucks and a Collar of Red Tuck.

Center—Carpenter Tweed in Navy and Gray Is Used for the Development of a Belted Jacket and a Pleated Skirt, Which Is Completed by a V-Necked Blouse of Gray Crepe de Chine.

Right—Gauze Tweed in Shades of Tan, Brown and White Is Employed for the Skirt, Blouse, and Jacket, Which the Upper Section Is Made of Tan Jersey.

Once upon a time, every little boy and girl was taught to inquire anxiously of Ba, Ba, Blacksheep concerning his supply of wool. Fortunately, it was plentiful. Now the same query is broadcasted to the merchants of the world, for a steadily increasing demand for woolen fabrics has been manifested in the smart capitals, beginning in Paris.

It has nothing to do with the season. The Parisienne started wearing light-weight woollens, jerseys and knishie examples, during the summer months; not last summer but several summers ago. So popular has the woolen dress become that a census taken any day at the Ritz and other smart luncheon places, would prove that the vast majority of women had laid aside crepes and crepe satins for crepella and all sorts of novelties—wool and silk, wool and cotton, or all-wool fabrics.

The reasons for this are several. First, one has always been known to tire of even perfection. For forsaking crepe de Chine, one needs no defense. It has been the material which has clothed us twenty-four hours of the day. What else is it? Of which night gowns are made, or sports suits, or ball gowns; that makes our lingerie and sometimes our coats? Crepe de Chine has not been discarded; it survives even this hard usage, but it is now, with all other crepes, excepting the woolen ones, secondary to the stunning new feather-weight woollens which come from looms of world repute.

The great objection to the woolen dress was its weight and clumsiness. One did not always rebel against its warmth. Now the two objections have been removed, for the new wool has the supple quality of silk and is soft in texture, as well as color, besides which, they have the added grace of appealing on all scores, not the least of which is novelty.

Financial and Commercial

New York, Jan. 8 (AP).—Constructive forces were again at work in today's stock market, which continued to respond to investment buying and easy credit conditions. American Telephone common was the individual feature, touching 155 1/4, an overnight gain of 1 point, and the highest price since 1905.

Buying of this issue undoubtedly was influenced by the possibility of increased earnings through the inauguration of the new Transatlantic telephone service.

With freight traffic being maintained in unusually heavy volume, railroad shares attracted a large investment and speculative following, with the best gains being recorded by such issues as Atlantic Coast Line, Atchafalpa, Delaware and Hudson and New York Central.

Commercial Solvents soared 7 points to a record top at 240 on talk of an early recapitalization plan. United States Steel common also responded to reports of expanding operations, with sympathy advances taking place in the independent steel shares. Motors picked up fast after a slow start, coincident with the opening of the New York automobile show.

Texas Pacific Land Trust, which touched a record top at 2090 yesterday was back at 1990 today, all transactions being in odd lots. The closing was strong. Total sales approximated 750,000 shares.

News of Interest to Members of Fraternal Societies.

The installation ceremonies were largely attended by Master Masons and Eastern Stars and were in charge of Past Patron William A. Dress of Blue Corded Silk—for Spring Wear

Marian Nixon, motion picture actress, is intrigued by this adorable model—an advance spring fashion. The dress is made of blue corded silk with collar, yoke, puffs and bottom of the skirt of periwinkle blue crepe de chine embroidered in colors. The yoke, Miss Nixon prophesies, will become more and more popular during coming seasons.

Popular Dolman Now Is Shown in Many Styles

In the matter of the line the word, dolman, is used to cover several styles of wraps. In general outline it has the width and length and large dolman sleeve which ends in a tapering line to cuff size at the hand or is gathered into a cuff band, usually of fur. The latest model is an adaptation of the old-style dolman, which is merely a basis of its architecture, and now is cut to emphasize width above the hip and a snug or wrap-around treatment below. The upper part blouses over the interesting line, which is either an inconspicuous cord or a girdle of embroidery or passementerie forming a high light in the design.

One of the most distinguished models of this type is made in velvet, with round high collar and cuffs of fox and a girdle of bead and metal needlework. The lifted line of this bloused dolman is very fashionable and is illustrated in some delightful models from Premier. Lenier's favorite model is a coat which flares into a ripple all around and is lavishly trimmed with fur. Worth makes a gorgeous evening coat of broadened silver lame that swings from informal box plaits from the shoulders and has a fur trimming of fox forming a deep band around the bottom, very large collar and elbow-length cuffs.

Small Accessories Are Important Part of Dress

Just as important in the correct attire for the street are the small accessories which go far to make or ruin the ensemble effect. Gloves must be chosen with care to complete the costume. The plain glove always is smart and never more so than this year, when one also is offered the choice of the equally smart glove with decorative cuff. The buttonhole plays an important part in every part of the wardrobe from the raggedy carnations of flannel on the sport dress, the crystal flowers for the tailored suit, the chiffon flower for the formal gown or the startlingly gorgeous blossom that brightens the somber winter coat. Bags, too, must be considered among the essentials of the costume. Here again there is a wide latitude from which to choose. The pouch bag, somewhat reduced in size so that it tucks easily under the arm, or the flat envelope, liked because it holds so much and is carried so easily, register with equal favor among the smartly dressed women.

Belts, Wide and Narrow, in Fashion Limelight

The belted coat is certainly a rare phenomenon in the belted girl. Run for belts, both wide and narrow, are a feature of every type of garment and they are especially active in the province of the jumper. Jumper tailcoats, worn so constantly by fashionable women all last winter and throughout the spring, are apparently scheduled for a winter run. They occur most frequently in the novelty versions screening beige and brown, but they are exceedingly good, also, in navy blue or black. Whenever their medium, we encounter them most frequently with a surprise clinging and with either a narrow or an extremely broad belt effecting the desired blouse.

A slight spring below the belt is almost invariably present in these present-day jumpers, and this flow makes more complete a resemblance to the good old-fashioned Russian blouse which we used to see in the same years ago.

"HARD LUCK" MINER LET FORTUNE SLIP

Claim Worth Half-Million Sold for $150.

The death of Quemel, B. C., of Abie Stott, characterized as the original "hard luck" miner, recalls the story of how he sold for $150 a claim which brought its purchaser a cool half-million, says the Los Angeles Times.

Since Stott's death the story of his early adventures in the Cariboo country has been told by old timers who knew him well and were in the territory when he listened to wisecracks who told him there could not be gold in his holdings and witnessed him sell his birthright for a mess of pottage.

Pat McKenna, a young Irish policeman, fresh from the Chicago blue-coated force, gets a place in this story because if he had not made Stott's acquaintance the Englishman probably never would have made his strike.

McKenna made his way up to Barkerville, then the headquarters of the Cariboo miners, and after a week of trying to drink the hardened miners under the table he decided to seek a quieter spot. He ran into Stott, who told him of the quietude around Eight-Mile lake, where the fish bit well.

A week in the new atmosphere was enough for the young Irishman to throw off the effect of his drinking bout and give him his fill of fishing. He decided he would do some prospecting. He did not know how to go about it and Stott, a window dresser, could give him little assistance. He decided to start right at the camp.

He dug a hole in front of the tent in which they lived. Presently he discovered nuggets in the bottom of his pan, even though practical miners said formation of the ground barred gold. Yet the partners turned up gold nuggets whenever they felt like panning a barrowful. Occasionally they went out and fished a day or two and replenished their pockets for months at a time.

Even then the scientists wouldn't admit gold was there in paying quantities. Eventually Stott became disheartened and sold his share in the claim to Billy Ogden, an old-time prospector, for $150.

Ogden and McKenna worked their claim for a while and when a Minneapolis man named Hannah offered them $10,000 for their property they grabbed it before the buyer could change his mind. Hannah began intensive work on the mine and when he got through with it he had taken gold to the value of $500,000 from the claim.

Woman Good Organizer

American genius for organization evinced by Countess Felix von Voss, formerly Esther Lawrence of New York, has revolutionized one of the richest landed estates in the former grand duchy of Mecklenburg. Countess Voss, the only American in the titled aristocracy of this province, has identified herself with her husband's agrarian interests. The poultry farm and the horticulture of the estate, are personally managed by her. Both have been brought up to date. It was the countess' idea, too, to provide a market for her own and neighboring products. She organized a sort of producers' co-operative store, from which the products are in turn sold to more distant places.

Anchemoody; chaplain, the Rev. James Cameron; foreman, Stephen Huber; first assistant, Nick Lippert; second assistant, J. Cannon; trustee, William Delaney; delegate to N. Y. F. Association, President Johansen; janitor, A. Moore.

Lloyd LeFever was admitted to membership. After the meeting the members enjoyed a roast beef supper with all kinds of refreshments and card playing.

The first card party in the new year will be held Wednesday, January 12, at 8 p. m., for valuable prizes. Refreshments served. Everybody welcome.

McDERMOTT ANXIOUS TO TELL THE TRUTH

Cleveland, Jan. 8 (AP).—Fay McDermott, convicted of the slaying of Don R. Mellet, Canton editor, and an important witness in the impending trial of Ben Rudner and Louis Masor, declared in his cell here today that he would "tell the truth" if put on the stand. He added: "But they won't put me on. They don't want the truth."

McDermott was brought here yesterday from Canton to testify against Ben Nadel, under indictment for harboring McDermott while the latter was being hunted for the murder.

There will be a dance at Allingville tonight. The music will be furnished by McDermott's orchestra.

To Walk on the Roof

In doing repair work on a roof or chimney, it is dangerous, if not impossible, to walk on the sloping roof with ladder-aid shoes. By cutting two "toes" about six and eight inches long from an old four-inch rubber shoe and slipping them over your shoes, you will be able to walk on an ordinary roof without slipping. If a job of repairs are handy, they will serve the same purpose.—Register Boston Herald.

COULDS MOON THREATEN BOTTLED CONCERN

Shanghai, Jan. 8 (AP).—A dispatch from Japanese sources at Khabarovsk yesterday and received here today said efforts of Chinese troops to preserve order there had been unsuccessful after twelve months had broken down the barriers to the foreign nation, and that the British consular was in danger.

Chinese crowds entered the Municipal Building, British business houses and private residences. Although Japanese residents were told at that time that the future was uncertain, Customs officers took refuge aboard an American warship.

Admits Fatally Injuring Smith

Aged Farmer Confesses He Fatally Injured Farmhand and Let Him Lying—Charged With First Degree Murder.

Providence, R. I., Jan. 8 (AP).—George H. Keene, 72-year-old farmer of Limerick, confessed last night after a six-hour grilling that last Monday night he had fatally injured Charles "Gus" Smith, roving farmhand, with his bare hands and had left him dying in a lonely country path in Georgetown.

Smith died in a hospital Tuesday. Keene last night was charged with first degree murder in district court at Harrisville, pleaded not guilty, waived examination and was held without bail for the grand jury.

Attorney-General Charles P. Benson issued a statement containing Keene's confession, which said in part: "Last Monday night I took a bundle of papers and started for Miss Brown's to give them to her and to pay her up for the use of her wagon. I got down to the milk house. Charles Smith stood there and as I got down almost abreast of him he started to come at me and said 'tonight mister' and swung at me."

NEW ZEALAND CITIES

A Road in New Zealand.

(Prepared by the National Geographic Society, Washington, D. C.)

NEW ZEALAND, more than 6,000 miles from America, comes spiritually closer as a result of a recent speech of its premier in London. He declared that to New Zealanders the American Revolution seems a beneficent thing from which New Zealand's present freedom flowed.

One needs but to see the two principal cities of the far-away island commonwealth to realize that America and New Zealand have very much in common.

"As hilly as San Francisco or Rio de Janeiro," "as land-locked as Seattle," "as windy as Chicago" are phrases used by travelers to describe Wellington. They will help Americans to construct a picture of the capital city of New Zealand.

Wellington has the best situation geographically of all New Zealand cities for its harbor opens on Cook Strait, the natural water roadway that splits New Zealand's land roughly into two parts. Situated on the southern tip of North Island, the city is almost exactly at the geographical center of the dominion, and in a position from which steamers can reach the ports of both islands by the shortest voyages. Because of this strategic central situation Wellington took from Auckland in 1864 the capital of the dominion.

Although Wellington undoubtedly has the best location with regard to New Zealand, it has not yet overcome Auckland's advantageous position for the South sea trade and the fact that both the big New Zealand ports can be reached with about equal ease from Sydney. Wellington's population is short of 120,000, but it is growing with great rapidity and may yet overtake that of its larger sister city to the north.

As is the case with Sydney, Auckland, Hobart and Melbourne, Wellington owes much of its prosperity to its excellent harbor. Shipping enters through a relatively narrow bottle neck to find a great, broad lake-like body of water opening out beyond.

Spreading Over the Hills. The city of Wellington lies on the southwestern side of the coast. Only a narrow strip along the coast is level and a considerable part of this has been reclaimed by filling in a part of the harbor. On this level plot near the water is the business section of the city and the government buildings.

Wellington obviously has been cramped by its hills; but just as obviously it has struck out to conquer them. Few cities have had to go in so deeply for engineering enterprises in order to expand. The hills rise steeply to heights of 700 feet and more. For years the city builders of Wellington have been carving and terracing their slopes, filling in gullies, tearing away ridges and building innumerable retaining walls and bridges and the work still goes on. Streets outside the level plot wind steadily along steep, working ever higher and higher.

As in Rio de Janeiro one man's house looks down upon the roof of his neighbor's below, and in turn is looked down upon by his neighbor's above. On some of the hills houses have been built all the way to the coast, and each year sees on other hills a revision upward of the "high house mark." Special cable and electric tram lines run up several of the hills.

The status of Wellington as capital of New Zealand has brought a considerable group of public buildings to the city. At first these buildings were of wood due to an earthquake scare near the middle of the nineteenth century. The old government building is one of the largest wooden structures ever built. In recent years brick, stone and concrete have been used to a greater extent in erecting large structures. The new buildings which house parliament and the town hall are monumental buildings of marble.

The city of Wellington is deeply in business for its citizens. It owns its water works, electric power and light plant, its factory, street railway lines, cemeteries, public baths, slaughter houses, and has a municipal monopoly for the distribution of milk.

Auckland, which was called "Last, loneliest, loveliest," by Kipling, may still seem lonely to those who never visit it; but with its 100,000 inhabitants and all the trappings of a modern American or English city it has interests and activities of its own which make the average Aucklander give scant thought to his geographic isolation.

There are other factors that work to banish thoughts of loneliness from the minds of Aucklanders. The port has become the busy center of trade with the South sea islands; and the ships of some of the chief Pacific steamer lines from San Francisco and Vancouver put in at Auckland on their voyages to and from Sydney. As a result of this service Auckland theaters and concert halls are supplied with the theatrical talent and musical artists who are interesting the rest of the world.

Auckland gives another example of the lavish way in which nature has dealt out wonderful harbors to Australasia. The main Auckland harbor, opening to the east—Waitemata harbor—furnishes about six square miles of deep, land-locked water; and this opens upon Hauraki gulf with an area of hundreds of square miles. A ship must steam 30 or 40 miles north from Auckland before it meets the swell of the Pacific.

In addition Auckland has a back-door harbor in reserves. The city is built on a hilly isthmus only six miles wide, with its main harbor on the east, and an almost equally commodious protected body of water, Manukau harbor, on the west. The site of the city is the narrowest point of North Island, one of the two large land masses of New Zealand; but to transfer ships from one harbor to the other—six miles apart—would necessitate a trip of more than 400 miles. At present Auckland's back-door harbor is used only for coasting steamers along the western side of the island.

Auckland's business section lies along the water front on the south side of the harbor, and along Queen street, whose well-paved, level surface hides a creek bed of early days. Substantial business blocks, some six and seven stories high, give the streets an aspect of an American city of a decade or so ago.

Old Volcanic Cones.

The residence sections of Auckland ramble up the slopes of hills that rise a short distance from the harbor. The entire isthmus is covered with old volcanic cones of various sizes, the highest, Mt. Eden, reaching an altitude of 650 feet. This prominence is a favorite objective for sightseers, dividing popularity with One Tree Hill, which is included in a magnificent 300-acre park. From either height one gets a magnificent view of slopes covered with cottages and gardens, the business section, the busy water front, the great harbor dotted with forest-covered islets, and beyond the inner water gate to the Pacific. To the west one may see entirely across the island and make out the blue waters of the sea that stretches off to Australia.

Auckland is almost the exact antipodal point of Gibraltar, and has a climate not unlike that of sunny Spain at its best. The temperature seldom rises higher than 82 degrees Fahrenheit in summer (December, January and February) or falls much below 49 degrees Fahrenheit in winter (June, July and August). The maximum temperature in Auckland in August is about 69 degrees. Pines grow in the parks beside the trees common to more southern climes. Grass remains green on the year round, and Aucklanders carry on their outdoor life through winter and summer alike.

Does your watch fail in this important duty?

No matter how accurate your watch may be, it is failing its job only partly if it's not in style. The modern watch is distinctive in shape, this in case, tastefully moderate in design. It adds personal appearance just as surely as an out-of-date timepiece detracts from it.

The most beautiful of all modern designs are to be found in cases by Wadsworth—the acknowledged style leaders in the dress of fine watches. In our store you may select from the finest movements, fitted in a wide variety of exclusive Wadsworth Cases.
